Fueled by the success of several sporty coupes and sedans, Mazda's massive rise during the 1980s was capped by the introduction of the all-new MX-5 Miata for 1990. The two-seat roadster redefined what a sports car could be and became an instant icon that also defined the Japanese carmaker. With a rev-happy twin-cam four-cylinder engine and a slick-shifting gearbox, the new two-seat, rear-drive, lightweight roadster provided a well-built, reliable and fun-driving machine for the masses.

Exterior Classic Red bathes the curved hidden headlight panels on this sports car. Small enough to be thrown around corners, and powerful enough to be able to handle it, she's in low mileage form and well cared for in rust free condition. Garaged all its life, our owner lovingly cared for her even retaining its original tires. Round and round she undulates as it forms the Miata which in German ...
