There are also a lot of interesting and inspiring videos featuring artists that have incorporated Live and other Ableton products into their music-making process. I've found that Live users range from DJs to music producers, to those interested in live event production (Iris by Cirque De Soleil was executed using Live.) While I can certainly chop it up for hours on end with my fellow "traditional" engineers who came up using early versions of Pro Tools, similar DAWs, or analog tape, it ...

Apple Logic Pro X and Ableton Live 10 are two of the most popular music production applications in the world, and as of May this year, they've got far more in common than just their version numbers. Before the release of Logic Pro X 10.5, Live's Session View gave it a creative angle all its own, but with the promotion of the Live Loops Grid from GarageBand iOS to Logic, that differential has been flattened.
