January 28, 1790. Sephardi Jews living in France are granted equal rights and given French citizenship by the National Assembly. In December 1789, following the French Revolution and the Declaration of the Rights of Man, the issue of Jewish rights was debated in the National Assembly for three days with no conclusion reached. The December 1789 debate ranged from the view that the Jews were and always would be a separate and distinct nation.

French nationality law is historically based on the principles of jus soli and jus sanguinis, according to Ernest Renan's definition, in opposition to the German definition of nationality, jus sanguinis, formalised by Johann Gottlieb Fichte. The 1993 Méhaignerie Law, which was part of a broader immigration control agenda to restrict access to French nationality and increase the focus on jus sanguinis as the citizenship determinant for children born in France, required children born in France of
