This type of instruction minimizes failure, which decreases frustration, especially for students acquiring a new language. What is “Scaffolding”? Scaffolding theory was first introduced in the late 1950s by Jerome Bruner, a cognitive psychologist. He used the term to describe young children’s oral language acquisition. As young children are first learning to speak a language, their parents and caregivers provide informal frameworks that facilitate the children’s learning.

Instructional scaffolding is the support given to a student by an instructor throughout the learning process. This support is specifically tailored to each student; this instructional approach allows students to experience student-centered learning, which tends to facilitate more efficient learning than teacher-centered learning. This learning process promotes a deeper level of learning than many other common teaching strategies. Instructional scaffolding provides sufficient support to promote l
