Lou is a woman with a fresh mission. It involves three of her old school mates, forgetting the husband she's just separated from, and an odyssey into the Australian outback. These warm, wise, feisty, fabulous 50-something women are all approaching the 'Age of Invisibility' - but they won't go quietly into that gentle night. . .

~~The Invisible Women's Society by Nikki Gemmill~~

The Invisible Woman: How to Navigate The Vintage Years by Helen Walmsley-Johnson, is part memoir, part well considered rant, part study, of what happens when women hit middle age. The examples we see in the media, if any, are those desperately trying to look young (or being castigated for not making the effort) or those giving in to beige cardigans.

On Monday we launched a new report which revealed a gender pay gap in the global chocolate industry, with the average woman cocoa farmer paid as little as 23p a day. That ' s less than a Freddo, the chocolate bar that has been informally used to measure the cost of living and inflation rates in the UK since the 1990s.
