A moral is the underlying message of a story. It is a lesson that teaches you how to behave in the world.

Sometimes the moral of a story may be explicitly stated through a maximum at the end of a story.

Otherwise, the readers or listeners of the story may have to determine the moral of the story for themselves.

AND THE MORAL OF THE STORY IS . . . I saw a Korean woman walking along the road carrying a bundle of sticks on her back. I thought to myself, "Life is like that." We all carry around bundles of stories starting from our childhoods and going through the rest of our lives. Some of the stories we have forgotten and others we will never forget. Some of these stories have influenced our lives. Others have had little effect on us. In this book I have pulled from my bundle of stories to share
