The pastor always has the good of the people in mind. Pastoral leadership is not self-serving. The pastor's desire is that healing and wholeness occur in the lives of the individuals and the systems to which he gives care. Likewise, the people of the congregation believe the pastoral leader has their good in mind.

However, the global and cultural expectations placed on leaders in all spheres of vocation demand that Christians have a unique answer that draws from our understanding of the nature of God, reflects the person of Christ, and is guided by the Holy Spirit. This is the conversation that the Theology of Leadership Journal hopes to spark. Much like the journal's logo, it is the editors' hope that theology and leadership will create a spectrum that bleeds into each other.

If the church's training program is weak, those leaders whom God has gifted must assume responsibility for improving it. Training is a theological idea. It is not optional in the church; rather, it is a vital part of what it means to be truly the church. The church that ignores or depreciates training ministries does so at its own risk.
